

Guidelines for Preparing Abstracts for NAISA

Categories under which Abstracts may be submitted:
Individual Paper, Panel, Roundtable, Film Screening

Please read these Guidelines carefully and consult the Tips for Professional Papers.

1 person = 1 role rule.

A person's name can only appear in one abstract submitted for consideration.

A participant within a panel or roundtable (presenter or discussant) may Chair the panel/roundtable. A Commentator (discussant) for a panel may not present a paper within that panel.

The only exception to this rule is when the NAISA Program Committee recruits someone accepted to the Program to Chair a session organized by the Program Committee.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ON SESSION SCHEDULING:

Individual paper presenters are allocated 20 minutes.

The Program time slots are scheduled for one hour and 45 minutes. If you are preparing a proposal for a Panel, Roundtable, or Film Screening, please plan to fit within this time limit.

If you are organizing a proposal for a Panel, you might consider the following possible combinations:

- (1) 3 papers (20 min. each) + Commentator (20 minutes) + approximately 20 minutes for audience questions and discussion;
- (2) 3-4 papers, NO Commentator, audience discussion;
- (3) Time might be scheduled for introductory remarks by Chair.

Title: 130 character limit.

Does your title succinctly describe the topic of your presentation?

The audience depends upon the title when choosing to attend papers/sessions. NAISA Council has received consistent feedback that titles that do not describe a paper or session make it difficult to choose what sessions/papers to attend. For the 2014 meeting, Council hopes to make abstracts accessible online.

Abstract: 250 word limit.

Does your abstract answer the following questions?

What? is this paper/session about; Who? are the players; When?; Where? geographic area, if applicable; How? what method is used; and Why? are the question or inquiry or conclusions important. State your findings / conclusions explicitly; it helps the Program Committee evaluate your proposal, and Program readers decide on which papers/sessions to attend.

Does your abstract begin with your topic / focus / question?

If there is necessary background or contextual information, put it at the end. The Program Committee is often frustrated by abstracts that provide 220 words of generic background and only offer a clue what the paper is about in the last sentence.

Substance: does the abstract describe the new knowledge, data, evidence, or interpretation that you are presenting to your field and to your colleagues?

Terms: do you use discipline- or area-specific jargon or terminology?

NAISA is broadly interdisciplinary, international, and includes community-based as well as academic-based scholars. Try to avoid or explicitly define special terminology.

Can your abstract be presented in 20 minutes?

Presenting the ideas encompassed by an entire book manuscript or dissertation project is not possible in 20 minutes. If you are working on a large project, identify a chunk of it for a paper presentation. It takes two minutes to read a double-spaced page: twenty minute paper = ten pages, no more.

Is the scope of your presentation appropriate to the venue?

Professional meetings are not an appropriate venue to present class papers that survey the scholarship within some academic field, unless some substantively new or creative interpretation is presented. The NAISA Program Committee has been skeptical of proposals that claim to survey all of American Indian/Native/First Nations/Indigenous Studies conceptually, methodologically, ethically, or otherwise.

To sum up: Is your abstract scholarly, focused, substantive, and descriptive?

Topics & Methods:

Because of NAISA's interdisciplinary and international character, the Program Committee welcomes a very broad range of topics and approaches. If prior Programs have not included your area or topic, please do not be discouraged from submitting an abstract. NAISA is always working to expand our coverage of issues of import to Indigenous Studies and to Indigenous peoples.

Panel Proposal:

A panel brings together 3 to 4 scholars, with a Chair and possibly a Commentator, to present developed papers. A commentator who discusses the papers is suggested, but not required. The Chair briefly introduces each presenter; keeps each presenter on time; and moderates discussion/questions from the audience at the conclusion of the session. A Chair may also present a paper, but they or someone else on the panel must monitor their time. The Commentator may not present a paper as part of the panel.

The Program Committee encourages organizers to recruit Chairs who are well established in the field of scholarship the panel addresses, especially if there are graduate students on the panel, as a way for senior and junior colleagues to get to know one another. Because NAISA meetings facilitate interdisciplinary and international cross-fertilization of ideas, the Program Committee discourages proposed panels composed entirely of graduate students from the same program/department/institution. Use this opportunity to put together a panel that mixes junior and senior scholars, graduate students and others, and scholars from different institutions, communities, disciplines, and nations.

Roundtable Proposal:

A Roundtable brings together a group interested in some defined topic of discussion, and opens that discussion up to include the audience. Roundtable abstracts with only 1 or 2 participants may not receive positive consideration from the Program Committee.

Film Screening Proposal:

Screenings should include commentary by the producer, director, actors, those who use the film in classes, critics, or other interested parties.

The Program Committee is open to suggestions for alternative formats for creative and scholarly presentations at the annual meeting. Please contact the NAISA Council to submit your ideas. Go to naisa.org for contact information.

IN CASE OF AN EMERGENCY REQUIRING WITHDRAWAL FROM THE PROGRAM

- When you submit an abstract proposal, you are making a professional commitment to attend the conference if your abstract is accepted.
- If a presenter who has been accepted to the Program is not able to attend the meeting, please contact the CONFERENCE ORGANIZERS as well as the session CHAIR as soon as possible.
- Of course emergencies happen, but the rate of late cancellations and no-shows has become an issue of serious concern at NAISA meetings. In the last week before the annual meeting, panels have been left with only one presenter. The Program Committee sympathizes with funding challenges, but withdrawals from the Program for other than emergency reasons, especially at a late date, seriously impact your colleagues within your session and the audience.
- See the conference website or Registration website for directions and deadlines for requesting a refund of the Registration fee.
