1. Course. Reframing Immigration and Immigration Reform: A Workshop on Strategic Communications (presented by The Frameworks Institute)

Session Organizer and Leader: Moira E. O'Neil, FrameWorks Institute

Co-Leader: Marisa Gerstein Pineau, The Frameworks Institute

The American Immigration Council has noted, "study after study has shown that commonsense immigration reform will strengthen the economy, spur innovation, reduce the deficit and increase U.S. trade and exports." Yet, current public discourse is highly divisive, policy change elusive and expert knowledge about immigration is drowned out or ignored. To address the need for meaningful, productive conversations that lead to strong public support for immigration and immigration reform, immigration experts joined forces with communications experts to explore what Americans know about immigration, how this knowledge base differs from what experts would like them to know, and what communications techniques can be leveraged to build support for adopting and implementing meaningful solutions. With funding from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, the FrameWorks Institute conducted a series of studies to develop communications strategies, tools, and techniques that researchers can use to translate the growing body of research on immigration and immigration reform to members of the public and policymakers. In this interactive workshop, participants will learn the research base that informs the framing recommendations and will include ample opportunities for participants to begin to apply them to translate their own research to non-academic audiences. Through this workshop, participants will learn to recognize problematic and optimal framing strategies, get practice in deconstructing and reconstructing communications around an important social issue, and explore the potential of a shared communications strategy in building issue coalitions and informing public policy.

2. Course. Creating Opportunities for Student-Facilitated Discussions in the Classroom and the Broader Community

Session Organizer and Leader: Suzanne R. Goodney Lea, Interactivity Foundation

During courses that use the IF model, students connect and bond more with fellow students – particularly those from different backgrounds – both inside and outside of class. Faculty, too, come to see and connect with students in more meaningful ways as they have a chance to really hear where students are coming from and to connect with them as mentors/coaches. During this intensive workshop, you will learn the IF method by doing/using it, with feedback as we go along on best practices. You will have time to think about how it might fit into one of your classes, and you will be ready to hit the ground running should you decide to use it even in a Fall 2016 course. There will be lots of time for questions, and you will receive unlimited access to IF's wide range of teaching support materials, student guides, rubrics, policy reports, and even a guide for using our discussions in online forums/classes. We will also support you via phone/email consultation once you return to campus so that you can truly adapt this method to your particular class(es). We look forward to spending an engaging day with you!

3. Course. MAXQDA 12 for Windows and Mac Qualitative Data Analysis (QDA) Software Training

Session Organizer and Leader: Neville Li, MAXQDA

Introduction: MAXQDA is a powerful qualitative data analysis software program used by researchers in education, government, NGOs and the commercial sector worldwide. In this workshop, we will learn the key functions of the software. Learning will be interactive and hands-on with sufficient time for participants to practice. Participants can walk out the classroom and start using MAXQDA in their projects right away! Learning objectives: 1. To identify what MAXQDA is and how it is different from other QDA software; 2. To learn the basic functions of MAXQDA including creating a project, coding, using visual tools, conducting text retrieval, and creating models for presentations and team meetings; 3. To interact in a hands-on learning environment and be able to use MAXQDA in your own projects right after the class. Technical requirements: Students will need to come with a laptop with MAXQDA version 12 already installed. It can be a purchased full license or a 30-day free trial downloaded from the company's website. This class is for MAXQDA for Windows AND Mac and is designed for the beginner and intermediate level. Outline I. Introduction to MAXQDA II. Coding III. Other useful tools IV. Variables V. Modeling - Using MAXMaps to visualize your data VI. Data Analysis and Exploration VII. Mixed Methods Analysis VIII. MAXDictio for quantitative content analysis IX. Practice exercises/mini-test X. Questions & Answers

4. Course. Qualitative Comparative Analysis and Fuzzy Sets

Session Organizer and Leader: Charles C. Ragin, University of California-Irvine

The analytic challenge of case-oriented research is not simply that the number of cases is small, but that researchers gain useful in-depth knowledge of cases that is difficult to represent using conventional forms (e.g., representations that emphasize the "net effects" of "independent variables"). The researcher is left wondering how to represent knowledge of cases in a way that is meaningful and compact, but which also does not deny case complexity. Set-theoretic methods such as Qualitative Comparative Analysis (QCA), the central focus of this workshop, offer a solution. QCA is fundamentally a case-oriented method that can be applied to small-to-moderate size Ns. It is most useful when researchers have knowledge of each case included in an investigation, there is a relatively small number of such cases (e.g., 10-50), and the investigator seeks to compare cases as configurations. With these methods it is possible to construct representations of cross-case patterns that allow for substantial heterogeneity and diversity. This workshop offers an introduction to the approach and to the use of the software package fsQCA (a free download from www.fsqca.com). Both the crisp (i.e., Boolean) and fuzzy-set versions of the method will be presented. Fuzzy set analysis is gaining popularity in the social sciences today because of the close connections it enables among verbal theory, substantive knowledge (especially in the assessment of degree of set membership), and the analysis of empirical evidence. Fuzzy sets are especially useful in case-oriented research, where the investigator has a degree of familiarity with the cases included in the investigation and seeks to understand cases configurationally—as specific combinations of aspects or elements. Using fuzzy-set methods, case outcomes can be examined in ways that allow for causal complexity, where different combinations of causally relevant conditions combine to generate the outcome in question. Also, with set-theoretic methods it is possible to evaluate arguments that causal conditions are necessary or sufficient. Analyses of this type are outside the scope of conventional analytic methods. Specific topics addressed in the course include: the differences between set-theoretic and correlational methods; conventional crisp sets versus fuzzy sets; the calibration of fuzzy sets; how calibration differs from conventional forms of measurement; analyzing fuzzy set relations; the correspondence between concepts and fuzzy set membership scores; the correspondence between theoretical statements and the analysis of fuzzy set relations; using fuzzy sets to study cases as configurations; and using fuzzy sets to unravel causal complexity, with a special focus on equifinality.

12:00 pm Sessions

5. ASA Social Media Preconference

Session Organizers and Leaders: Dustin Kidd, Temple University and Tressie Cottom, Virginia Commonwealth University

The 2016 Annual Meeting will offer a special pre-conference aimed at increasing knowledge of social media and strategies for using these tools in sociological work. The Social Media Pre-conference is organized by Tressie McMillan Cottom (Virginia Commonwealth University) and Dustin Kidd (Temple University). The Pre-conference will take place on Friday, August 19 as part of the pre-convention program activities, at a charge of $50.00 to registered attendees of the Annual Meeting. Those interested in attending must register in order to reserve their space. Topics covered include: Creating a social media strategy Twitter for Academics Framing Social Research on Social Media Social Media Techniques for the Classroom

6. Course 6. Incorporating American Community Survey and US Census Data into Undergraduate Courses

Session Organizer: William H. Frey, Brookings Institution
 Leader: John Paul DeWitt, University of Michigan
 Co-Leaders: Jill Bouma, Berea College

Katherine R. Rowell, Sinclair Community College
Esther Isabelle Wilder, Lehman College

This course will focus on how professors can integrate analyses of U.S. Census and American Community Survey (ACS) data in relevant, user-friendly ways in such courses as Intro Sociology, Social Problems, Stratification, Race Relations, the Family, Sociology of Aging, Population, and more. Adding data analysis to substantive undergraduate sociology courses supports the American Sociological Association initiatives to introduce students to data "early and often" throughout the curriculum. This course will introduce resources available for integrating data analysis into a wide range of sociology course subjects and levels. Participants will learn about the Social Science Data Analysis Network (SSDAN) directed by Professor Frey at the University of Michigan. The course will begin with an overview of the SSDAN project and data analysis materials. Brief tutorials on the easy-to-use software tools will follow, with examples drawn from existing U.S. Census and ACS access tools. In a "hands-on" session, two person teams will "play the role of students" and conduct analyses of pre-tailored 1950-2010 Census, and 2010 ACS data.

8. Opening Plenary. Beyond the Battle of Seattle

Session Organizer and Presider: Ruth Milkman, CUNY
Graduate Center

Panelists: Walden Bello, University of Philippines, Diliman

Amy Goodman, Democracy Now

Kshama Sawant, Seattle City Council

In November 1999, the city of Seattle was the site of massive protests against the World Trade Organization, during its meeting there, an event that became known as the "Battle of Seattle." More recently, Seattle has emerged as one of the nation's most dynamic cities, and one that is unusually progressive. The city's voters elected an avowed Socialist to its City Council and led the nation in the "Fight for 15," an effort to raise the minimum wage to $15 per hour. Panelists will reflect on the Battle of Seattle and its legacy, as well as on recent developments in the city.

9. Thematic Session. Right-Wing Movements and Inequality: Looking to the Future

Session Organizer and Presider: Rory M. McVeigh, University of Notre Dame

Panelists: Kathleen M. Blee, University of Pittsburgh
Mabel Berezin, Cornell University
Christopher Parker, University of Washington

Discussant: Rory M. McVeigh, University of Notre Dame

A wave of progressive social movement activism beginning in the 1960s helped to reduce various types of social inequalities. The spread of progressive activism also attracted the attention of sociologists and other social scientists, creating a vibrant research field as scholars sought to better understand the emergence of social movements as well as the determinants of their successes and failures. In recent decades we have observed increases in conservative or right-wing activism, with many right-wing movements borrowing organizational forms and tactics previously employed by progressive counterparts. While social scientists were somewhat late in turning their attention to right-wing movements, that has begun to change. Our knowledge of conservative activism has grown substantially in recent years. In this session, scholars who have expertise pertaining to different types of right-wing movements will draw upon their past research to project into the future. While the wave of progressive activism has contributed to social equality in areas such as civil rights, LGBT rights, and gender equality, is there reason to expect that in the years ahead right-wing movements will experience success in rolling back gains that progressive movements have achieved, and exacerbating ongoing inequalities and injustices? Presentations by leading scholars will be followed by an open discussion of the future of right-wing activism.

10. Thematic Session. Urban Protest in the Global South

Session Organizer: Ann Mische, University of Notre Dame

Panelists: Patrick G. Heller, Brown University
Ann Mische, University of Notre Dame
Zeynep Tufekci, University of North Carolina

Discussant: Gay W. Seidman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

In the past half-decade, the world has seen an expansive wave of global protest, triggered by a combination of economic and political grievances that include austerity measures, unemployment, inequality, precarious public services, authoritarianism, corruption, police violence and state repression. Economic demands have been interwoven, in varying proportions, with challenges to political leadership and institutions and calls for the expansion of electoral and participatory democracy. Many of these protests have taken on a specifically urban dimension, occupying public squares and avenues while raising issues of access to and mobility in urban space. At the same time, the protests have relied heavily on new social media technologies, which have linked these protests together in a transnational public arena. This panel will explore the political, economic and social dimensions of these protests, with a focus on movements in the global South (broadly understood). We will feature panelists who are currently studying the recent protests in India, Brazil, and Turkey, putting these in comparative perspective with protests in other parts of the world.

11. Author Meets Critics Session. Do-It-Yourself Democracy: The Rise of the Public Engagement Industry (Oxford University Press, 2015) by Caroline W. Lee

Session Organizer: David S. Meyer, University of California, Irvine

Critics: Nina Eliasoph, University Southern California
William D. Hoynes, Vassar College

Philip George Lewin, Florida Atlantic University
Gianpaolo Baiocchi, NYU

Author: Caroline W. Lee, Lafayette College

12. Professional Development Workshop. Writing for Contexts. And the World

Session Organizer: Syed Ali, Long Island University

Leaders: Syed Ali, Long Island University
Philip N. Cohen, University of Maryland, College Park

Panelists: Letta Page, Contexts Magazine
Joshua Aaron Page, University of Minnesota
Ilene Kalish, New York University Press
Dana R. Fisher, University of Maryland

Writing for the broader public is a skill many sociologists haven't developed. The editors of Contexts and others on the panel will try to help. We'll give you our take on how to write for a broader audience, starting with how to write for Contexts. Others on the panel who have written for Contexts and the popular media will also help explain how to translate your academic research for the world.

13. Policy and Research Workshop. European Research Council: Funding for U.S. Sociologists (and Elsewhere!) Willing to Explore Ideas or Territories Never Explored Before

Session Organizer and Leader: Lionel Thelen, European Research Council

In Turbulent Times not only banks, institutions, companies or even countries are under pressure but also individuals and, among them, researchers. Studying crisis times can be of the utmost interest for social sciences in general and for sociology in particular. Unfortunately another feature of our hectic times are, in US and in various countries worldwide, financial difficulties to make ends meet as well as limited budgets for universities, research centres and, subsequently, frequent cuts in social sciences research funding. Taking the exact opposite position, the ERC funding capability increases each year and the part of the budget devoted to social sciences has been bettered from 2015 onwards. With funding up to 3.75 million $ for a 5 year project, the ERC has become – in less than 8 years – one of the major funding bodies worldwide and certainly the most generous for Social Sciences and Humanities. “What do the ERC schemes have to offer to sociologists?” “How to get started with an application?” “How to increase your chances to get funding?” “What are the main hitches to avoid?” These are all relevant questions that will be raised during this workshop. Do not hesitate to bring yours! This session is opened to all sociologists aiming to design and lead to their good end ground-breaking research projects. The presentations will be done by ERC Scientific Staff as well as by Grantees and Panel Evaluators. Each presentation will be followed by a Q&A session and presenters will of course be available during the whole duration of the Conference to answer your queries. Flyers, reports and publications will be available to help you inasmuch as possible, not forgetting, last but not least, our website: <http://erc.europa.eu/>

42. Presidential Panel. Climate Change and Social Movements

Session Organizer: Ruth Milkman, CUNY Graduate Center

Presider: Kenneth Alan Gould, City University of New York - Brooklyn College

Panelists: Robert D. Bullard, Texas Southern University
Beth Schaefer Caniglia, Oklahoma State University
Andrew Szasz, Univ of California-Santa Cruz

Climate change has emerged as a key social issue in recent years, and has helped to spur the growth of social movements around the world focused on environmental issues. Sociologists have been increasingly engaged with these issues as well. This panel features a group of leading sociologists who have written extensively on climate change and the social disparities with which it is intertwined, as well as the growth of environmental activism in the United States and worldwide.

43. Thematic Session. Digital Natives and Online Politics

Session Organizer: Jennifer Earl, University of Arizona

Panelists: Henry Jenkins, University of Southern California

Shelly Boulianne, MacEwan University

Jennifer Earl, University of Arizona

Thomas V. Maher, University of Arizona

Discussants: Sarah Gaby, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill

Hava Rachel Gordon, University of Denver

Are youth less engaged than older generations had been at their age or are digital media allowing youth to be politically engaged in new ways and at impressive levels? Or, is reality somewhere between the Putnam-induced pessimism and a digital utopia? This panel will investigate these issues by examining shifts in youth engagement overall, shifts from more traditional formats of engagement such as voting to more engaged formats such as protest participation and/or volunteering, and the risks and advantages of these changes. Panelists come from a variety of backgrounds, including the leading scholar on fan-inspired activism (Henry Jenkins) as well as scholars specializing in social movements, youth studies, and digital media studies.

44. Thematic Session. Riots, Protest, and Social Movements

Session Organizer: Michael Biggs, University of Oxford

Presider: Michael Biggs, University of Oxford

Panelists: Elijah Anderson, Yale University

Randall Collins, University of Pennsylvania

Discussants: Susan Olzak, Stanford University

Bert Useem, Purdue University

The massive riots that swept American cities in the 1960s attracted intense and sustained interest from sociologists. Recent years have seen an upsurge in rioting on both sides of the Atlantic, from London in 2011 to Stockholm in 2013 to Ferguson, Missouri in 2014. Although there is now an enormous literature on rioting, this literature treats riots in isolation from more typical forms of protest (like demonstrations) and from organized social movements. Conversely, quantitative analyses of protest events usually lump riots together with demonstrations and other forms of protest. This session will explore the relationships between rioting, more conventional forms of protest, and organized social movements.

45. Thematic Session. Wealth, Inequality, and the Future of American Politics

Session Organizer: Mikhail Balaev, Flinders University

Presider: Mikhail Balaev, Flinders University

Panelists: G. William Domhoff, Univ of California-Santa Cruz

Gordon Lafer, University of Oregon

Heather McGhee, Demos

Zach Silk, Civic Ventures

This panel will discuss the influence of individual and corporate wealth in American politics. Specifically, the panelists will examine (1) how inequality of wealth and income shapes politics and public policy, especially in terms of campaign contributions and lobbying, and (2) the struggle to reform this, such as various efforts to change campaign finance laws, challenge Citizens United, grassroots movements, etc. Although money has always been a major factor in acquiring political influence in the U.S., in less than a decade the influence of money has increased dramatically. 2008 Citizens United Supreme Court decision eliminated the restrictions on political expenditures by nonprofit corporations known as 501c(4). These organizations created a new avenue for undisclosed money to be directed to influence political outcomes. During 2012 Presidential elections, this "dark money" exceeded all Super PACs' expenditures. The 2014 McCutcheon Supreme Court decision lifted the overall limit on individual political contributions thus enabling wealthy individuals to contribute to unlimited candidates or parties. This decision is a major reason we have just seen the most expensive 2014 midterm elections in the U.S. history. In sum, the influence of money in politics today is unprecedented. When the wealthy have disproportionate influence on the political process the non-elite majority population is marginalized and effectively disenfranchised. The panelists (two academics and two social activists) will offer unique perspectives on the role of money in American politics and discuss whether and how this can possibly change and how the dominance of wealth in political decision-making can be challenged.

46. Special Session. Water: Whose Crisis?

Session Organizer: Ben Crow, University of California

Panelists: Peter Mollinga, University of London

Margreet Zwarteveen, UNESCO-IHE

Ben Crow, University of California

Veronica Strang, University of Durham

While there have been great leaps in our understanding of the social relations of water in the last two decades, global discourse is dominated by overly simple ideas of a crisis arising from global scarcity and of a need for safe drinking water. This session will bring leading analysts of water and water justice in urban and rural areas of the global South to explore some of the following themes: • How the processes of neoliberalism play out in the water domain, • Modes of contestation in everyday practice, water policy, hydro politics and global politics of water • Politics of water scarcity • Linkages between gender, displacement and resistance, access to water in peri urban areas • Interface between science and policy in the government of water • Understanding water contestation beyond universalist human rights The growing understanding of water contestation at a moment of global integration, urbanization, climate change and challenge to the neoliberal era of capitalism provides opportunities to think through new theories and identify new possibilities for collective action.

48. Regional Spotlight. Homeless in Seattle: Responding to a State of Emergency

Session Organizer: Jennifer L. McKinney, Seattle Pacific University

Presider: Jennifer L. McKinney, Seattle Pacific University

Panelists: Tim Burgess, Seattle City Council

Andrew Heben, Tent City Urbanism

Karen A. Snedker, Seattle Pacific University

Heather D. Evans, University of Washington

Homelessness is a growing problem in Seattle and King County, where the annual One Night Count for 2015 found 3,772 men, women, and children without access to shelter—a staggering 21 percent increase from 2014. The increasing presence of those who are homeless in the city led to Seattle Mayor Ed Murray and the City Council to declare a state of emergency on homelessness. How do those who are homeless advocate for better housing and resources and how is Seattle responding in unique ways to the crisis?

49. Departmental Management and Leadership Workshop. Adjunct, Contingent, and Part-Time Faculty: Creating Department Structures to Support Faculty and Promote Student Learning

Session Organizer and Leader: Marisa Camille Allison, George Mason University

In recent years there has been an increased national focus on the growing number of non-tenure track faculty and the conditions in which they work. Tenured and tenure track faculty, who made up almost 60 percent of total faculty in 1975, are now only 25 percent of the professoriate. Non-tenure track faculty are the new faculty majority and research shows that they often lack equitable compensation (with many earning less than a living wage), with little to no benefits to their employment, are heavily relied upon to support the teaching needs of their institutions with little to no assurance of continued employment, have few advancement opportunities, and are given little support for their teaching and within their classrooms. Research has shown that hiring temporary faculty was initially a short-term solution to a set of larger problems in higher education, including a booming student population and a decline in state and government funding. It has now become the standard hiring method at colleges and universities across the nation. This trend toward contingency is accompanied by several well-documented problems, including a decline in educational quality, lower graduation rates and less contact time between faculty and students, band-aid solutions to larger educational staffing problems such as reduced hiring standards, and the rise of what has been described as a “caste-based faculty system”. This workshop will address the ways in which sociologists are affected by the changes within the professoriate and how we can support efforts to improve working conditions on college and university campuses. Examples of best practices both within and outside of sociology programs will be shared to workshop participants.

50. Professional Development Workshop. A Conversation about Careers: Sociologists in a Changing Economic Landscape

Session Organizer and Leader: Mardi Kidwell, University of New Hampshire

51. Teaching Workshop. Carrying Out Qualitative Research in the Real World: Confidentiality, Ethics, IRBs, and Other Real-life Challenges

Session Organizer: Karyn Lacy, University of Michigan
Leader: Alford A. Young, University of Michigan

Ethical Issues in Qualitative Methods is a 90-minute workshop designed to offer instruction to graduate students and early career scholars about sensitive issues pertaining to field research in communities housing vulnerable populations, including racial and ethnic, class-based, gender, and LGBT communities. The issues to be explored include the ethics involved in studying vulnerable populations; interpreting university rules regarding interactions with human subjects; data-sharing policies; meeting IRB guidelines; and standards for maintaining confidentiality. The workshop will also include attention to how researchers can best maintain their own emotional and physical safety and security while engaged in such field research as well as ethical issues involved in the analysis of data collected from vulnerable populations and the intellectual politics in writing about them. In essence, research design, data gathering in the field, data analysis, and writing and publication will all be considered as crucial and distinct sites for critical reflection about ethical conduct in researching vulnerable populations.

81. Thematic Session. Challenging Economic Inequality: Leveraging Cracks in the Structures of Business Power

Session Organizer: Fred Block, University of California-Davis

Presider: Nitsan Chorev, Brown University

Panelists: Mark S. Mizruchi, University of Michigan

Stephen Lerner, Georgetown University

Stephanie L. Mudge, University of California-Davis

Alexander Hertel-Fernandez, Harvard University

Fred Block, University of California-Davis

"The 2016 election for president is likely to see a vigorous debate about the deepening inequality of wealth and income in the United States. The issue has already become a major topic in the early maneuvering of candidates in the primaries of both parties. The issue is also being kept alive by social movements fighting for a higher minimum wage and for raises for workers in the fast food industry. At the same time, there is also more and more scholarly discussion of what are the best policy measures for reducing economic inequalities. However, reversing deeply rooted patterns of economic inequality requires big reforms, and the opportunity for major reform initiatives occur rarely in U.S. politics given the power of entrenched economic interests. In fact, a strong current of research in political sociology suggests that such reform breakthroughs are only likely to occur when there are deep divisions within the economic elite. Hence, this session will focus on the question of current divisions within the economic elite and the prospects that social movements might leverage those divisions to win major reforms. The speakers will address the issue of fragmentation and division within the U.S. business class and how this might link to movements from below."

82. Thematic Session. Indigenous Movements in the 21st Century

Session Organizer: Mary Romero, Arizona State University

Presider: Janet Convey, Independent Scholar

The Indigenous Movement and Progress in Brazil: The Need to Redefine Modernity. Angela A. Gonzales, Cornell University; Jonathan W. Warren,

Protectors not Protesters: Indigenous Resurgence Movements In Hawai'i and Beyond. Noelani Goodyear-Kaopua, University of Hawaii

Lateral Movements Up: How Appropriating New Cultural Practices Vitalize Indigenous Sociocultural Standings in Highland Peru. Arthur Scarritt, Boise State University

Discussant: Janet Convey, Independent Scholar

In the face of global capitalism, conditions for indigenous communities have worsened and organizing to against exclusion and dispossession have taken on diverse strategies around the world. Unlike previous indigenous movements, the new movements call for all countries to recognize the rights of indigenous populations, including the right to self-determination, and the right to preserve their culture and heritage.

83. Thematic Session. The New Politics of Participation

Session Organizers: Francesca Polletta, University of California, Irvine

Presider: Francesca Polletta, University of California, Irvine

Discussant: Francesca Polletta, University of California, Irvine

Elisabeth S. Clemens, University of Chicago

Amidst concerns about the public's disengagement from politics, opportunities for citizen participation in various kinds of deliberative forums have proliferated. Such forums exist alongside the new kinds of collaboration made possible by the Internet; from Wikipedia and reddit to crowdsourcing. Champions hail an era of Democracy 2.0, in which participation is made easy, fun, and effective. Critics ask, variously, if participation substitutes for power, if the discussion that takes place in the contemporary public sphere is truly deliberative, and if elites end up benefiting more from public participation than the public. This panel tackles the potential and realities of public participation today. Panelists will discuss how the professionalization of participation is shaping its meaning; how women fare in the digital public sphere; how people understand the purposes and limits of advocacy; and what role universities can and should play in creating active citizens.

84. Special Session. Changing the Conversation – The Stigma of “Difference,” Connectedness, and the College Toolbox Project

Session Organizer: Bernice A. Pescosolido, Indiana University

Presider: Bernice A. Pescosolido, Indiana University

Panelists: Glenn Close, Bring Change 2 Mind

Bernice A. Pescosolido, Indiana University

Jennifer C. Lee, Indiana University

Rachel Green, Indiana University

The College Toolbox Project (CTP) is the first effort of its kind to develop a systematic program aimed at making the college environment more open to “difference” and a “stigma free zone”. While The CTP combines the growing recognition of the widespread prevalence of mental health problems in society, and particularly among the college-aged population; sociological research on the power of “connectedness” to produce change; and the energy, talent, and open orientation of the Millennial generation; it has a number of unique features based on sociological principles. The CTP is designed as a social movement “by students, for students” (including the logo designed by students above); uses the concept of cohort replacement to generate population-level change; and recognizes that “difference” of many forms (e.g., race/ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation) are deeply related to mental health issues, particularly the risk for college suicide. Thus, initiated by the powerful vision and support of Glenn Close and her non-profit organization, Bring Change 2 Mind (BC2M), a four-year research project was designed and led by a team of sociologists and others to develop a set of materials, pilot-test, and evaluate the efficacy of a four year college-based anti-stigma program that will subsequently be packaged and distributed for use by BC2M, free of charge, to colleges and universities, both nationally and world-wide.

85. Special Session. Critically Evaluating Religious Diversity (co-sponsored with Association for the Sociology of Religion)

Session Organizer: Lori Beaman, University of Ottawa

Presider: Heather Shipley, University of Ottawa

How Researching Religious Diversity Deconstructs Both

Religion and Diversity. Gary D. Bouma, Monash University
Religious Diversity and Migration: Some Critical Thoughts. James Arthur Beckford, University of Warwick Complexity theory – a helpful tool in theorizing multiple religious trends? Inger Furseth, University of Oslo Issues in Measuring Diversity. Peter F. Beyer, University of Ottawa

This session examines religion and diversity, examining the prevalence and use of religious diversity as a catch phrase for sociologists who study the multiplicity of religious practices. One concern about the use of religious diversity is that it can result in identity rigidity, excluding more flexible forms of religious practice and belief. Scholars from various perspectives critically examine the meanings of religious diversity and the consequences of these approaches.

86. Special Session. Nones and the Northwest (co-sponsored with Association for the Sociology of Religion)

Session Organizer: Ryan T. Cragun, The University of Tampa

Presider: Ryan T. Cragun, The University of Tampa Nones: The New Regional Establishment? James K. Wellman,

Emerging Understandings of the Human Person and Community among 'Nones' in the Pacific Northwest. Patricia Killen, Gonzaga University

Religious Nones in Canada: Freedom from Religion. Joel Thiessen, Ambrose University

The percentage of those who identify as "nones" or non-religious is highest in the Northwestern United States and in Western Canada. In this session, scholars who study regional variation in religiosity examine the factors that have contributed to the high rates of non-religion in this region of the country and how the high rates of non-religion have influenced the culture of this region.

87. Special Session. Rethinking Cannabis Policy Reform Movements

Session Organizer: Joshua S. Meisel, Humboldt State University

Presider: Joshua S. Meisel, Humboldt State University
Panelists: Philippe G. Lucas, Center for Addictions Research of British Columbia

Amanda Reiman, Drug Policy Alliance
Mark Cooke, American Civil Liberties Union-Washington State

Craig Reinerman, University of California-Santa Cruz

The purpose of this session is to provide a regional focus on cannabis policy reform experiences in Washington, Oregon and British Columbia, with a particular focus on the Seattle, Portland and Vancouver metropolitan areas. While cannabis legalization activists in Washington celebrated their victory in 2012, their Canadian counterparts have struggled in the face of a Federal crackdown on cannabis possession and cultivation. Session participants have been invited from both the academic and activist communities who can shed light on the relative successes and failures of efforts to end cannabis prohibition on both sides of the U.S./Canadian border. These presentations will highlight how cannabis reform social movements navigate rapidly changing political and cultural landscapes. Presentations will draw attention to strategies employed by activist groups to build coalitions, mobilize resources and effectively frame the cannabis legalization debate.

88. Author Meets Critics Session. Grounds for Difference (Harvard University Press, 2015) by Rogers Brubaker

Nancy Foner, Hunter and CUNY Graduate Center

90. Regional Spotlight. Immigration and Refugee Dynamics in the Northwest

Session Organizer: Mytoan Nguyen-Akbar, South Seattle College

Presider: Nancy Farwell, University of Washington

Panelists: Roxana Norouzi, One America

Jorge Barron, Northwest Immigrant Rights Project

Beth Takekawa, Wing Luke Museum

Cities and counties are often the primary vehicle for local immigrant and refugee integration efforts. Today, Seattle has become home to one of the most diverse zip codes in the country and boasts 129 languages in its School District. Almost one in five residents is foreign-born. Seattle through its coordinated citywide efforts with civic and nongovernmental organizations and schools is poised to become a leader in local immigrant and refugee integration. The panel will address a brief overview of the history of immigrants and refugees in Seattle's neighborhoods, current municipal efforts to integrate immigrants and refugees, and timely issues surrounding future Syrian refugee arrivals (estimated for 2017) and the ongoing youth detentions at regional immigrant detention centers.

91. Professional Development Workshop. How (and Why) To Do Corporate Research

Session Organizer and Leader: Robert J.S. Ross, Clark University

To demonstrate the possibilities for teaching and research afforded by online and publicly accessible databases on firms and industries. It is intended as introductory, but participants will be invited to share experiences and resources. Three uses and types of material will be illustrated: one associated with the teaching of a stratification course in which students assess the theories of G. William Domhoff and Michael Useem. This uses Boards of Directors as a starting point. A second illustration is an explication of the kinds of material available in Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) Forms 10 and 14A and some of the NGO databases that use it. A third example will be a corporate profile intended as a resource for anti-sweatshop NGOs, and illustrating the use of multiple sources (including LexisNexis) and collaboration among faculty, graduate students and undergraduates across different campuses. A list of resources will be distributed and if time permits a brief view of them will be provided. Participants who intend to attend may request digital materials ahead of the meeting.

92. Professional Development Workshop. Writing Op-Eds: The Fine Art of Communicating

Sociological Science in the Newspapers

Session Organizer and Leader: Stephanie Coontz

93. Policy and Research Workshop. 50 Years of the National Longitudinal Studies - A Workshop for New and Returning Users

Session Organizer: Elizabeth C. Cooksey, Ohio State University

Leader: Elizabeth C. Cooksey, Ohio State University

Panelist: Steve McClaskie, The Ohio State University

The first National Longitudinal Study respondent was interviewed in April 1966. Over the past 50 years there have been 7 different longitudinal surveys that have collectively interviewed close to 54,000 respondents with approximately 730,000 interviews and multiple thousands of variables across a wide range of areas of interest to sociologists. Three of the NLS cohorts are ongoing and there are plans to reinterview members of two others. If you have never used the National Longitudinal Surveys before or you have but feel a little rusty, then this is the workshop for you! Elizabeth Cooksey (PI of the NLSY79 Child and Young Adult studies), and Steve McClaskie (head of User Services for the NLS program) will give a brief overview of the various NLS datasets, bring you up to date on new developments, and provide hands on instruction for how to search for information and download data.

94. Teaching Workshop. Creating Undergraduate Applied Sociologists: Starting/ Building and Administering an Internship Program for Sociology Majors

Session Organizer: Ginger E. Macheski, Valdosta State University

Leader: Ginger E. Macheski, Valdosta State University

Co-Leader: Norma Winston, University of Tampa

More than half of sociology undergraduates do not continue into graduate course work; fewer still pursue graduate work in sociology. Most enter the workforce upon completing their degree. In a sense, the majority of our undergraduate sociology graduates become 'applied sociologists'. An internship program imbedded within Sociology curriculum, where students have one foot in the classroom and one foot in the workforce, can help students develop an applied sociological identity and use their 'sociology toolkit' in their professional endeavors. This workshop will be twofold: 1) It will give participants concrete materials to build and administer an internship program at their home institutions, and 2) It will discuss ways to encourage our students to maintain their sociological identity and to utilize their sociological training in their internship and subsequent careers.

95. Graduate Programs in Sociology

Session Organizers: Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

Jaime Hecht, American Sociological Association

As part of the Graduate Education focus, a resource poster area will be open for browsing in the exhibit hall of the Washington State Convention Center. 126. Thematic Session. Fighting Walmart: From Local Contests to Global Campaigns?

Session Organizer: Virginia Parks, Occidental College

President: Penelope W. Lewis, Murphy Institute for Labor Studies-CUNY

Panelists: Virginia Parks, Occidental College

Carolina Bank Muñoz, City University of New York-

Brooklyn College

Eddie Iny, OUR Walmart

In early 2015, Walmart announced a pay hike for its lowest paid workers in the U.S. to $9 an hour. Business pundits explained Walmart's decision as a natural market response to the tightening labor market of a recovery economy. Other commentators, including Paul Krugman, credited the role of grassroots mobilization and public pressure; in short, power. Social and political mobilization challenging Walmart's business practices—including low wages, union busting, discriminatory pay, and negative environmental impacts—has changed and evolved over the last decade. This session examines the evolution of these multiple tactics and strategies, ranging from local site fights in urban markets to a national campaign of Walmart workers pressing for better working conditions to unionization campaigns among Walmart workers outside of the U.S. The session focuses on how social actors have defined, or been defined by, the form and scale of engagement in their claims making activities against Walmart, global capitalism's preeminent economic standards setter. How have the tactics and remedies advocated by these social actors shaped the political terrain of engagement by both mobilizing allies (and opponents) as well as delimiting the scope of possible claims and remedies? Comparative case studies of site fight campaigns, local municipal policy initiatives, labor rights enforcement, and unionization drives serve to elucidate the ways in which local contests may scale up to generate broader global campaigns against Walmartization forces. Alternatively, these case studies may underscore the ways in which popular resistance remains rooted in local political and institutional repertoires of action and remedy. Session participants will consider the relative advantages of different change strategies and their corresponding outcomes of success or failure.

Behind the proliferation of convenings and conversations within public life, there is a powerful hope that problems can be resolved simply by getting people to talk to one another and work things out.
This hope resonates with powerful theoretical claims, notably by Habermas, concerning the transformative role of new kinds of publics as a feature of modernity. But this hope easily turns utopian, allowing us to evade questions of which conversations change the world?
Through what mechanisms or processes? Through the analyses of episodes of conflict and political engagement, this session opens a conversation on the sociological reconception of the civil sphere.

Globalized capitalism has generated the massive movements of peoples across border and challenged both their countries of origin and host countries to respect their human rights and to accept their organizing efforts in finding solutions to improve their conditions.
Organizing across borders is gaining strength among workers, youths and families. These movements are explored through DACA organizing in the US and the international organizing of domestic workers.

129. Thematic Session. Unions in Higher Education: Vision, Reality, Analysis

Session Organizer: Dan Clawson, University of Massachusetts

Presider: Dan Clawson, University of Massachusetts

Panelists: Martha Ecker, Ramapo College of New Jersey
Steven Pitts, University of California-Berkeley

Ian Robinson, University of Michigan

Unions are a significant presence in higher education. Although faculty unions are unusual in public sector Research I institutions and almost non-existent in the private sector, faculty unions are important in much of the public sector, graduate student unions have increased dramatically in the last twenty years, and unions are common among clerical and maintenance staff. What is the promise/vision of higher education unions and what is a realistic assessment of what they have (and have not) accomplished? What sorts of issues are and are not addressed by research on higher education unions? How can the research inform union practice, and in what ways does union practice suggest research issues? This session will involve a moderated panel discussion, with the presider posing a set of questions to panelists.
Significant time will be reserved for audience participation.

130. Special Session. 20 Years since Welfare Reform Session Organizer: Celeste M. Watkins-Hayes,

Northwestern University

Presider: Celeste M. Watkins-Hayes, Northwestern University

Panelists: Kathryn J. Edin, Johns Hopkins University

Linda Marie Burton, Duke University

Ellen R. Reese, Univ of California-Riverside

Scott W. Allard, University of Washington

The passage of the 1996 Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act (PRWORA) set a new and definitive tone in the United States' stance toward aid to the poor, that of time-limited cash assistance. At the same time, the Affordable Care Act, the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (formerly known as food stamps), and the Earned Income Tax Credit have gained increased attention as important policies and programs for low-income individuals.
What is the current state of the social safety net for low-income families, and what are the lasting effects of these massive shifts to the welfare system? What are the current dimensions of poverty in the US and how do they differ from the pre-PRWORA era? In this session, leading scholars in the field will reflect on the political, economic, and social impact of welfare reform and point to new directions in the study of poverty, social policy, and collective organizing by and for the poor.

134. Policy and Research Workshop. Big Data for Social Science Research: Theoretical Framing, Analytical Techniques and Emerging Research Standards

Session Organizer: Patricia E. White, National Science Foundation

Leader: R. Saylor Breckenridge, Wake Forest University

Co-Leaders: Julia Potter Adams, Yale University

Hannah Brueckner, New York University - Abu Dhabi Campus

David B. Grusky, Stanford University

Paolo Parigi, Stanford University

The Sociology Program at the National Science Foundation (NSF) supports large-scale data infrastructure projects and basic research projects to construct and analyze "big data," and develop new methods and theoretical frameworks by which it can be used in basic research. This session focuses on the research context, trade-offs, limitations, and promises of "big data" for basic social science research. Representatives from the NSF Sociology Program, and Principle Investigators (PIs) on NSF-funded big data projects will describe data accessibility and availability, analytical techniques and tools, conceptualization and theoretical framing, and major research findings from funded research. The session is interactive; audience participation is encouraged.

135. Teaching Workshop. Innovative Teaching Approaches for Hybrid and Online Courses

Session Organizer: Melinda Jo Messineo, Ball State University

Leader: Melinda Jo Messineo, Ball State University

Co-Leader: Andrea Nicole Hunt, University of North Alabama

This workshop explores best practices in online and hybrid teaching and addresses the following questions: What is new in online and hybrid innovations? What is and is not living up to the promise? How can I best use technology to facilitate learning in online and hybrid contexts? How can I replicate the organic exploratory conversations of the face to face environment online? What are ways that I can connect with my students and have significant sociological learning experiences while also maintaining a reasonable workload?

Five years ago, a new wave of social movements emerged in the United States and worldwide, beginning with the Occupy Wall Street movement which began in New York City and then spread across the nation and the globe. This in turn gave rise to a variety of other social movements, from Black Lives Matter, to the Fight for 15, and more. Panelists will discuss this new cycle of protest, its impact and its future prospects.
